

JEWEL Headlines PACER's 22nd Annual Benefit

JEWEL, headline performer for PACER's 22nd Annual Benefit, is a multi-faceted gem. At 29 she is an accomplished performer, songwriter, poet, actress and philanthropist.

JEWEL will be performing acoustically at the PACER Benefit on Saturday, May 1, at the Minneapolis Convention Center. Tickets are on sale now!

The Times of London hailed JEWEL as "the most sparkling female singer-songwriter since Joni Mitchell." Since recording her first album several years ago, JEWEL has continued to explore fresh avenues, branching out from her folk roots to incorporate rock, pop, country, blues, jazz, and classical influences into her work. She released her fifth album, entitled 0304, last summer. Her previous four albums have sold 25 million copies worldwide and brought three Grammy nominations. In addition, JEWEL has received an American Music Award and an MTV Video Music Award. In addition to her artistic endeavors, JEWEL founded The Higher Ground for Humanity Foundation, whose ClearWater Project provides safe drinking water in third world countries.

PACER's Benefit audience can expect a sparkling performance from this charismatic artist. In addition to performing for sellout crowds on her own tours, JEWEL has performed at the Nobel Peace Prize ceremonies, Super Bowl XXXII, for Pope John Paul II, and for President Bill and Mrs. Clinton.

The Benefit begins at 6:15 p.m. at the Minneapolis Convention Center with a spectacular Silent Auction that features getaways, elegant dinners in private homes, electronics, artwork, jewelry, and other unique items, such as lunch with local celebrities. A popular pre-concert gourmet dinner is available for up to 250 people in the Seasons Rotunda at 5:00 p.m. Tickets for the dinner are $75 per person and are sold separately.

Other attractions before the performance include a Raffle and Live Auction. Raffle rovers will be selling $20 raffle tickets for two pieces of elegant jewelry donated by Wixon Jewelers. First prize is an exotic strand of Tahitian black pearls valued at $9,000; second prize is a 9.22 carat Rubellite Tourmaline, a loose gemstone valued at $4,000. The Live Auction, conducted by KARE 11 news anchor Frank Vascellaro and auctioneer Karen Sorbo, offers unique items. They include a 2-year lease on a 2004 BMW Z4 2.5i Roadster, donated by Sears Imported Autos; a Minnesota Twins Fantasy Camp for two in Florida, donated by the Minnesota Twins; and a newly-released snowmobile, the upscale "800 Revolt," by Redline Performance Products.

Ticket prices range from $50 to $525. Guests who purchase patron level tickets ($135 and above) are invited to a champagne and dessert Patron Party following the performance.

Passion, Dedication, and Hope are the Core of PACER Volunteers

Sam (front) was at the Marshall Field's event this year with his friend Peter Froelich (back).

Kathy Graves feels indebted to PACER for the help she received for her son Sam, especially the wide variety of software that she and Sam checked out of the Simon Technology Center's lending library.

PACER, however, has mutual appreciation for Kathy. PACER staff and leaders couldn't be more grateful for Kathy's commitment to PACER to continue its work with families of children with disabilities.

When Sam was 2 years old, Kathy contacted PACER about assistive technology. Sam, who was fascinated by the computer and has cerebral palsy, tried a tracking ball and several software programs. On the way out the door, Executive Director Paula Goldberg invited Kathy to participate in PACER's Benefit meetings. Without even having attended a PACER Benefit, Kathy jumped right in and landed in charge of the silent auction committee.

Now Sam is almost 11 years old, Kathy has been to eight PACER benefits and two national conferences, chaired the PACER Board and the Benefit committees, and she runs on the same vigorous passion she did nine years ago.

"I am always astonished at the level of energy and amount of commitment that comes out of PACER meetings because people are willing to do anything," she said. "I've never seen PACER say 'No' to anything. PACER has so many projects going on—that's what makes it such a great organization."

She commends PACER for looking at the whole child for his or her whole life, partly because Sam benefited from that mentality.

"We could have not taken advantage of Sam's mind just because he is in a wheelchair," Kathy said. "But Sam is at the top of his class. He is a very bright kid."

He's also just another pre-teenager.

"Sam is just a typical kid in so many ways," Kathy said. "He bugs his brother Nick, he loves sports, he loves Lemony Snicket and Harry Potter books, and he hates veggies."

"He even got in trouble for 'running' in the hallway at school in his wheelchair," Kathy said, laughing.

Sam's experience has been far different than Kathy's cousin, who was born with spina bifida long before the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA) passed and PACER was established. The cousin was never allowed to attend school, but she was very intelligent.

"She is who I think about—what a waste of her mind," Kathy said. "We cannot go back to putting people in institutions. That's why it is so important for PACER to continue its work."

Chocolate and Children: A Winning Ticket!

Kelly Nitschke and her husband Dale were hosts for the evening's event. Kelly is a member of the event committee. Dale, president of target.direct, is a PACER Advisory Board member.

Friends and families served by PACER again previewed Marshall Field's popular animated holiday display in early November while contributing to PACER Center programs for children with disabilities.

For the fifth year, the department store selected PACER as a charity partner for its Annual Holiday Auditorium Show. Charlie and the Chocolate Factory was the theme for the 2003 display. Proceeds from the event benefit PACER programs such as the Simon Technology Center and the COUNT ME IN puppet program.

Investing in PACER's Future

By Beth Casper

When Rosemary Fish learned about making a planned gift to PACER Center, she didn't hesitate. Bestowing a part of their estate to PACER was the perfect way for Rosemary and her husband, Marvin, to show their appreciation to and support of this national center that helps children with disabilities.

A planned gift is any charitable gift given:

- for any amount or purpose,
- for either current or deferred use, and
- that requires thoughtful consideration with respect to a donor's overall estate and financial plans.

The most widely known planned gift is a bequest that is part of a will.

"I've been around PACER for a long time so I really have had a chance to see up close what PACER does, and equally as important, how well they do it," Rosemary said. "I also have a child with special needs, and she has certainly benefited from PACER."

Leslie Fish was born with cognitive disabilities. Rosemary and Marvin found PACER when Leslie was 4 years old, and Rosemary immediately became involved in PACER's work.

When Leslie was 10 years old, a social worker placed her on a waiting list for participation in a local non-profit organization. After that, Rosemary received a letter from the organization stating that it was removing Leslie from the waiting list because the volunteers did not want to work with children with disabilities.

"I remember showing that letter to PACER and asking what could be done," Rosemary said. "PACER really stepped up to the plate, further underscoring their commitment to kids. After I am gone, I want PACER to continue to be there for kids."

PACER plans to establish an endowment fund to ensure that PACER's services will be available for families of children with disabilities in the future. An endowment is a fund established to provide financial stability for an organization. Gifts made to an endowment are held in perpetuity. Only income generated by the endowment may be withdrawn for program support; the principal of the fund is held in perpetuity and may not be used.

"We like the fact that it is an ongoing gift," Rosemary said. "And I really entrust PACER to take this in and do some good. There are so many youngsters with special needs who have no one to go to bat for them. Certainly for many families, they are facing some of the worst dilemmas of their lives. PACER is there for them."
