PACER's National Bullying Prevention Center began in 2006 as part of PACER Center in Minneapolis, MN. The National Bullying Prevention Center has affiliates in other states, however, the Los Angeles office is the only other Center.

Last year, with only one staff person, the L.A. office reached 9,400 students, educators, and individuals to help prevent bullying. PACER plans to expand the L.A. office with additional staff so more students and educators can be reached.
