Resolving Special Education Issues: It seems like the school is not following my child’s Individualized Education Program (IEP)—What can I do?

Sample question

Sometimes my son comes home from school and reports that he did not have time to finish his math or reading tests at school. We agreed at his Individualized Education Program (IEP) meeting that he will have extended time to complete all tests and daily work, but I’m concerned that this is not happening. How can I address this issue with the school?

Answer

This is a common question that many parents ask. Your child’s IEP is a written statement of services and accommodations the school will provide for your child. Services and accommodations, such as extra time for work or for testing, are based on an evaluation that identifies your child’s educational needs. As a parent, it is important that you feel comfortable with what the IEP team agreed upon. You must be kept informed that these services and accommodations are being provided to your child. The following are some useful steps that parents can take to be sure that the IEP is carried out as it is written.

Step One
First, check your child’s IEP. Are the services or accommodations you are concerned about specifically listed, including when they will be provided or under what circumstances? For example, does the IEP actually state that extra time to complete work will be provided each day, or, does it say something like “accommodations will be provided when the teacher determines they are needed?” Language is very important. Unless the IEP specifies when the extra time will be provided, parents and teachers may find themselves concerned over whether an accommodation is needed for a particular task.

Step Two
If the IEP clearly states that the services or accommodations are to be provided daily or on a specified schedule, you will want to be sure that they are actually being provided. You can do this in several ways, but the easiest is to call the IEP manager, whose name will be listed on the IEP. One of the duties of the IEP manager is to serve as the primary contact for the parent.

You may say to the IEP manager, “My child’s IEP states that he will have extended time to complete his math tests and daily work, but Billy told me that this does not always happen. As a result, his papers are often not complete, and his grades are lower than they should be. Could you help me to find out what is actually happening with this accommodation?”

The IEP manager may respond in one of several ways. He or she may meet with your son’s teachers, and ask questions about when and where the accommodations are provided, or may arrange for another IEP meeting so you can express your concerns and attempt to resolve the issue. IEP services or accommodations are not “optional,” but are a planned response to meet a child’s educational needs that are connected to his or her disability. As such, the IEP services and accommodations must be provided.
If you discover that your child's IEP is NOT being implemented as written, you may consider requesting an IEP meeting. There are several reasons to request a meeting. A teacher may not understand the importance of providing the accommodations, or may not be clear about his or her role in providing the services. The meeting provides an opportunity to clarify expectations and build better communication among the parent, the teacher, and the rest of the IEP team. It is also the place where you can ask for a written plan from the school to make up for the services or accommodations not provided.

Step Three

If you have tried to resolve your concerns in a meeting and you do not believe that another meeting will be effective, you have several options. One option is to contact a PACER advocate to explore specific strategies or to know what other methods are available.

You may also call your school principal or special education director and ask for help in ensuring that the IEP is fully implemented. Many differences can be resolved at the local level.

The other is to file a formal complaint. If you have tried without success to resolve your concerns at the school building level, it is important to speak with the special education director of your school district before deciding to file a formal complaint. The special education director is responsible for how special education is implemented in your district. They can be very helpful to parents and schools when IEP issues arise.

Step Four

If none of the previous solutions have worked, the final step is to consider filing a written complaint with the Minnesota Department of Education, Division of Compliance and Assistance. A formal complaint is a written statement that a school district is in violation of state special education law. The department will investigate the complaint and make a written decision based on law and will include any needed corrective action. For more information on the complaint process, you can call PACER at (952) 838-9000 and request to speak with an advocate, or you can call the Minnesota Department of Education at (651) 582-8689.
